The Heath Ranch farmhouse is a long building built in three sections approximately six bays long by one deep. It is two and a half storeys in height and has been built on a stone foundation. The oldest part of the house is located in the eastern section. It is roughly two bays square with a chimney in the west gable of brick. It has a cellar and brick arch fireplace support. This section has very thick walls and could possibly be of log construction. There was no evidence of anything, prior to C.1820. An early addition was built on the east gable end one-bay square with a brick inside end chimney. This fireplace has a mantel piece composed of a mantel shelf supported by a plain frieze and pilasters down each side of the fireplace opening. There is an enclosed stair which leads to the second floor. The entire house has a gable roof which is not the original, but which is old. It is now covered with asphalt shingles but originally had wood shingles which are barely visible beneath the new. The roof has a box cornice also. A frame three-bays long addition was built in the mid-1800's on the west gable end and served as a kitchen with a walkin fireplace. There is an enclosed stair on one side of the fireplace built of beaded boards. The house has random width pine flooring. The early section of the house is sheathed in beaded lumber. The exterior of the house is covered with asphalt shingles. On the south side of the roof are four gable roofed dormers with trim that matches the fireplaces. There are two dormers on the north side. There are four entrances on the south side of the house and two on the north wall. Some of the window sash is 6/6 while others have been replaced.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Heath Ranch farmhouse has colonial lines although it dates from the early 1800's. Part of the house could be log, but it could not definitely be found out. There is evidence of another structure on the site which was perhaps built of brick. The farm is a working business concern as it has been since before the Revolution. The present owners say that a title search that they did revealed that the land was owned by the Heath family in early times.
